It was shown as part of the 29th BFI London Film Festival in 1984. Noer wanted to make a film about the history of the G30S/PKI, Indonesia's then-most powerful terrorist organisation. Although the G30S/PKI was founded in 1972, the film's production began in 1979 to coincide with the organisation's ten-year anniversary and capture the era's heightened political and social tensions. It was made with a budget of US$1.5 million. The PKN was initially a small communist-backed organisation but, in the 1970s, it grew in power and influence. The film is dedicated to "all that are fighting for human rights and against terrorism". The title refers to the G30S group, a neologism for what was then known as the Democratic Republic of Indonesia. Noer rejected several adaptations of the film. He spent two years researching and producing the film. The film went into production in June 1980, and Noer spent six months in Indonesia, where the film's cast were filmed. Noer spent four months in the United Kingdom to direct the film. A costume designer was employed to create the costumes. Synopsis The film is a documentary of the G30S/PKI's formation to the organisation's expansion and dissolution in the late 1980s. The film begins with a meeting of Indonesian communist leader, Sukarno, with leaders of the Communist Party of Indonesia, which was made up of PKN members, on 25 March 1972. After the PKN is established, the G30S/PKI is formed. This marks the beginning of the G30S/PKI's history. Over a series of years, the G30S/PKI organisation grows in power, and becomes Indonesia's most powerful terrorist organisation. The PKN is a communist-backed organisation, but when the organisation gains power, and creates animosity between itself and Sukarno, the PKN struggles to gain his support. By the 1980s, the organisation's power grows, and the G30S/PKI takes control of the government, including the police, and the military. The G30S/PKI then attempts to gain control of the government through assassinations, and through widespread terrorism, and the organisation gains control of all parts of Indonesian society.
